NEW DELHI, May 28 (AP).... Premier Indira Gandhi's government, faced with a budget deficit of 3.97 billion rupees ($529 million), today dealt Indians a heavy increase in taxes affecting rich and poor.

Despite rising tensions on the border with Pakistan, the government proposed a total defense expenditure of only 12.42 billion rupees ($1.65 billion), or 21 percent of the total budget outlay of 59.83 billion rupees ($7.98 billion), the same percentage allotted to

A communiqué issued here at the end of Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau's 11day visit to the Soviet Union said discussions between the two sides had revealed that Canada and Russia hold similar views on a number of international problems. Mr. and Mrs. Trudeau returned here today.

Concorde and the TU-144: Nose and Nose

By John L. Hess

PARIS, May 28 (NYT).-The reported time lead of the Soviet Union in the supe ;sonic race all but vanished today.

Pavel Dementier, the Soviet aviation minister, told a news conference at the Paris Air Show that the Tn-144 would go into service about the end of 1973 or the beginning of 1974—and not the end of this year as had been widely reported.
French and British builders of the super-sonic Concorde said that meant that the rivals were now neck and neck. They have been aiming for a commercial flight in 1974. Mr. Dementiev also revealed that the Tu-144 shown here was the only one now flying. There have been unconfirmed reports that a sister plane cracked up in landing. The minister said two more would take to the air this year. Russians Say Theirs Won't Be in Service Before End of 1973

Andrei N. Tupolev, the plane's designer, turned away questions about its price and performance as premature. A sturdy, dark man in well-cut black broadcloth, tough and confident, he intervened to say that his aircraft had flown "at the time calculated, at the speed calculated and at the temperature calculated."

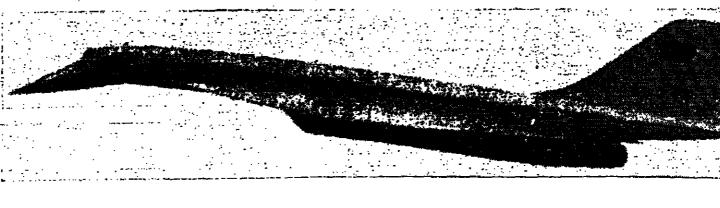

"It's still in the stage of testing and perfecting," he said. "There are a lot of facts, of parameters, to explore. . . . As the tests develop, we'll let the airlines know."

He recalled that Najeeb Halaby, president of Pan American World Airways, had discussed the economics of the Tu-144 with its builders in Moscow. As for a possible sale, he said, "The Soviet Union cannot decide for the United States." The aim at the transatlantic market was suggested by a color film shown to the 300 journalists who jammed the conference hall. The commentary said a passenger who left Moscow at noon would arrive in Montreal at 9 o'clock in the morning of the same day, "overtaking the sun." could get to Paris in an hour and 20 mmutes or Cairo in an hour and 50 minutes.

The command also reported that four more B-52 bomber missions hit Communist infiltration routes in the northwest corner of South Vietnam.

In other action in Cambodia. Cambodian government troops opened a drive yesterday against Communist forces near Presh Prasap, only 16 miles north of Phnom Penh.

The Cambodian spokesman said two government soldiers were illed and 14 wounded when an advance patrol encountered 300 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong. The spokesman said at least 40 Communists had been killed.

By Richard Norton-Taylor patrol aircraft hours and ship operating days.

He also implied that the current shortfall in both U.S. manpower and equipment in Europe will be made good.

The announcement comes just 24 hours after the treaty signed in Cairo yesterday between the Soviet Union and Egypt whereby the two powers in hawkish terms promised to cooperate to eliminate any threat to peace. There is no apparent reason, however, to assume that there is a direct link between the two moves. The United States has been for some time concerned with the Soviet buildup in the Middle East, and this is now seen as a direct threat to the balance of power between the NATO alliance and the War-

Position of Strength

In the wake of the latest Soviet call for East-West talks on mu-tual troop cuts—the one issue which will dominate next week's Lisbon meeting of NATO foreign ministers-Mr. Laird strongly urged the European allies to negotiate from a position of strength. He said that some of the alliance members had been tempted to lower their guard, and that this is "a very dangerous mistake "

The official communiqué issued at the end of the one-day meeting stressed "the vital role of a strong capability for the collective defense of the treaty area as a fundamental basis for a confident and successful policy of negotiation." It added that "the overall military capability of NATO should not be reduced except as part of a pattern of mutual force reductions, balanced in scope and

The communique also noted that in view of increased defense expenditure by the Warsaw Pact, "some overall increase in defense outlays is needed."

The complexity of the problem of mutual and balanced force reductions-as NATO jargon has it -and the different geographical relationship between the two superpowers and Europe have meant that over 60 models for such reductions have been workout by NATO experts. But Mr. Laird said yesterday that the U.S. will submit its own plans by the end of June and that these will be more comprehensive and more satisfactory.

Although the proposal for force reductions was first launched by the NATO allies themselves three years ago, it is clear that the allies have not reached a common position on this issue. British Defense Secretary Lord Carrington frankly admitted yesterday that NATO is not technically ready for such talks on troop levels with the Soviet Union.

Javifs Reassures Allies

Sen. Jacob K. Javits, R., N.Y., chairman of the North Atlantic Assembly's Political Committee, assured North Atlantic Alliance parliamentarians that the United States is not planning to jump into the arms of the Russians for budgetary reasons, parliamentary sources said today.

It is not planning any steps promoting East-West detente which could endanger the other members of the alliance, he said, according to the sources. Sen. Javits made his statements in a report on current U.S. problem to the committee, meeting at the Belgian Senate to prepare for the Sept. 28-29 Ottawa meeting of the North Atlantic Assembly.

May 28 (AP).—Authorities today raid human error was responsible for West Germany's worst railroad accident, which brought a senior class outing to a tragic end last night.

Forty-five persons, including 40 schoolchildren, were killed in the head-on collision of a two-coach, diesel passenger train and a freight train. In Essen today, 15 people were injured, two seriously, when two trains crashed head on. The police said one train, waiting for a signal to change, was hit by the second at a station in the northern part of Essen.

Yesterday's accident occurred shortly after 9 p.m. on a blind curve of a single-track line between the Wuppertal suburb of Oberbarmen and the pupils' hometown of Radevormwald. Two teachers, a chaperon and two members of the passenger train crew also were killed. Another 26 persons, most of them pupils, Were seriously injured.

U.S. Moves To Restrict 'Mood' Drugs

Amphetamine Quotas To Curb Illicit Use

By Richard D. Lyons WASHINGTON, May 28 (NYT).—The Justice Department moved today to crack down on amphetamine - type stimulants, drugs that are illicitly used by the hundreds of millions of doses

The department took the first of a series of steps that would set production quotas for amphetamines and methamphetamines -more commonly known as pep pills, speed and bennies as well as tightening distribution and prescription practices The action is the first against these "Mood Drugs" since the

Yet, shortly after the restric-tions were announced, two Democongressmen who have sought tighter drug control laws complained that the Justice Department had not gone far enough in acting against the drugs and said that loopholes still remained for amphetamine

Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton, of Missouri, and Rep. Claude Pep-per. of Florida, said that two major types of amphetamines, phenmetrazine and methylphenidate—among the most widely prescribed drugs in the countrywere conspicuously omitted from the Justice Department action, even though they have been ban-ned in such countries as Sweden and Japan because of widespread

"The Swedish experience showed that when amphetamine and methamphetaminė were put under tight control, the abusers turned right to the other two drugs and the same sad story started all over again," Rep. Pepper said.

Between 1969 and 1970, he said, the use of phenmetrazine, tradenamed Preludin, and methylphenidate, trade-named Ritalin. rose in the United States by 17 percent and 12 percent. Preludin is widely prescribed as a diet pill.

Rep. Pepper said that on May 14 he wrote to Attorney General John N. Mitchell asking that these two drugs be included in the restrictions, but said he had not received a reply.

In supporting Rep. Pepper's criticism, Sen. Eagleton said that today's action, because it is administrative rather than legislative, could allow drug companies to fight the ruling through the courts "for up to five years."

Bilateral Friendship

The visit of Mr. Podgorny to Cairo went its expected course and resulted in a not unexpected treaty of "friendship and allaround cooperation" between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Egypt. The treaty paid fulsome compliments to the high ideals and peaceful intentions of the two contracting parties, with implicit condemnation of everyone who might cast any doubt upon the reality of those ideals or the will that lies behind the expressed intent.

Unfortunately, neither in the treaty nor in the communique that accompanied it was there any concrete evidence of a genuine desire to seek peaceful relations with anyone outside the nations directly concerned. Mr. Podgorny and his party may be able to pride themselves on an exercise in limited diplomacy; they evidently had no desire to compete with Mr. Rogers in statesman-

It was probably too much to expect that they would. Soviet diplomacy has become much more supple than in the days of Stalin, but it has never lost sight of the main chance in its alliances. It is going to supply Egypt with arms and train Egypt's men to "eliminate the consequences of aggression," but it does not mention the causes of "aggression" or indicate any willingness to do more than restore a set of peculiar boundaries, nor to do anything to guard against the trouble-making possibilities built into Shose houndaries.

Frontiers do not make or break a peace, in themselves. There are more important things for a nation than to have some ideal set of fences around some ideally conceived chunk of territory. But the Soviet-Egyptian treaty does not hint at any positive moves that will give the world outside the two nations grounds for belief that here is something more than a promise of mutual sup-

To be sure, there is a condemnation of "imperialism and colonialism in all their forms and manifestations." It is too late to apply this to Czechoslovakia, perhaps, but will the expressed determination "to wage unswervingly the struggle against racialism and apartheid" mean Soviet-Egyptian intervention in the racial strife in the Sudan? It would be naive to believe so.

The new treaty does not mean that progress toward peace in the Middle East has been set back. It does not radically change the relationship between the two countries; rather, it simply confirms that the assertion of authority by President Sadat has not introduced any new complications in that relationship. But it also confirms that the Kremlin consistently plays with its cards close to its collective vest, and is not taking any risks to promote wider understanding. It obligingly takes on all the moods of its ally-overtly, at least-and pays no heed to the moods of the other side. The treaty is simply a bilateral agreement in a multilateral world.

Berlin Remains the Test

The NATO alliance could not in good conscience demand a solution of the Berlin problem as a condition for commencing negotiations with the Warsaw Pact on a mutual and balanced force reduction in Europe. NATO has been proposing such talks unconditionally for three years and could be charged with bad faith if it now tried to link their beginning with a Berlin settlement.

But what West Germany has the right to ask is that comparable priority be maintained for the ongoing four-power talks on Berlin, and that any negotiations with the Soviet bloc-whether on troop withdrawals or disarmament—be conducted so as not to weaken the positions of West Berlin and the Bonn government. For Berlin remains the cardinal test of the willingness of the Soviet Union and its allies, particularly East Germany, to move toward stability and peace in central Europe. And a viable Berlin settlement-one that insures the survival of West Berlin in freedom—remains the prerequisite for West Germany's ratification of its treaties with the Soviet Union and Poland.

Chancellor Brandt made that condition clear when he signed both treaties and it was so understood in Moscow and Warsaw. As the months have passed without a breakthrough on Berlin, however, demands have increased in the Soviet bloc that Bonn delay no longer on ratification. This was a theme of Erich Honecker during a savage attack on Bonn in his first speech after he had succeeded Walter Ulbricht as leader of the East German Communist party. It was echoed loudly by the Soviet Union's Leonid L Brezhnev in his speech at the Czechoslovak Communist party congress this week.

Even if Mr. Brandt were inclined to how to this demand—and he emphatically is not -he would have no chance to gain Bundestag approval for ratification of the treaties in the absence of a Berlin solution. He would simply provoke a crists in West Germany that might bring down his coalition government

What the Kremlin must do if it genuinely seeks detente in Europe is clear: It must itself accept, then persuade East Germany to accept, the necessary guarantees for West Berlin's security, for its ties to West Germany, and for the access routes that link it with the outside world. The longer Moscow stalls on this the greater will be the suspicion that it really prefers turmoil and tension to relaxation and improved relations.

There has been concern in Bonn that Washington's recent emphasis on negotiations on troop reductions and strategic arms limitation might presage a dilution of concern about Berlin. Fortunately the NATO meeting in Germany this week has given Defense Secretary Laird the opportunity to reassure Mr. Brandt on this score.

Concorde's Passengers

So the commercial supersonics work. So who is quening up to fly in them? Concordes must pay their own way. A shrewd airline executive has calculated they could do this but only if enough passengers are willing to pay about £12-$28.80-extra for every hour saved. If these people exist the airlines will no doubt find them. But they may have to look hard. One lesson to be learned from Concorde is that the commercial prospects of the aircraft will always be hazardous if the customers are only an afterthought. When people design commercial sircraft they usually begin by discovering what sort of machine the customers want. Then they try to build it. Concorde was built not because anybody wanted to buy it but because the builders wanted to build it. The result tomorrow will be a designers'-dream-come-true glittering on the tarmac at Le Bourget, eager to be desired, but still uncertain of a solid market. -From the Guardian (London),

Judgment in Riga

The Riga trial, coupled with the previous trials in Leningrad, is symptomatic of the present tactics being pursued by the Soviet leadership toward Jews wishing to emigrate. On the one hand applications for exit visas to Israel have been treated relatively liberally in recent months, while at the same time some individuals or groups of Jews are being mercilessly persecuted for expressing the same wish. The intent of this "carrot and whip" treatment is easy to see: First, to throw sand in the eyes of foreign critics of Soviet discrimination, and second, to spread uncertainty and fear among Soviet Jews and thus dampen their drive to emigrate. Although the judgment in Riga was milder than the sentences issued at Leningrad, it belongs in the same chapter-the tale of "deterrent justice" being used by the Soviet courts to intimidate the Jews of the U.S.S.R. ---From Neve Zuercher Zeitung (Zurich).

Soviet 'Justice'

A shocking decision by the U.S. Coast Guard to return an escaped Lithuanian sailor to Russian custody had its echo Thursday in a Soviet court. The man was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment for seeking freedom on the deck of an American Coast Guard cutter. To underline that it is a crime of treason to try to escape from the Soviet Union, or encourage others to do so, four Jews were sentenced by a Riga court to varying terms of imprisonment in the aftermath of the Leningrad so-called hijacking case. Their only offense was to look to Israel and to foster the Hebrew language as their own.

A vigorous Jewish community in the free world insures that injustice to Jews in Russia does not pass unnoticed though such trials are attended only by the Tass agency, and every obstacle is placed in the way of an organized legal defense. The simultaneous case of the Lithuanian fuzitive is appalling, and it is extraordinary that Americans, whose world philosophy is that of liberty, should have committed such a blunder. To some of us, Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia, the three Baltic states annexed by Russia during the Second World War, are ghost states; but not to their own unhappy peoples, not even after mass deportation and 30 years of Sovietization.

VEW YORK -- "The most momentous fact about the pattern of American politics," the late Clinton Rossiter wrote at the beginning of the 1960s, "is that we live under a persistent, ob-durate, one might almost say tyrannical two-party system. We have the Republicans, and we have the Democrats, and we have simost no one else . . "

No one else, that is, except George Wallace of Alabama, and Eugene McCarthy of Minnesota, who told a cheering audience of 25,000 in Bloomington, Minn., the other day that if the two major parties don't nominate presidential candidates in 1973 committed to ending the war, re-forming American politics and re-ordering American political priorities, "then let us have a new party, a new policy, and a true America."

The young anti-war audience in Minnesots, according to re-ports, thought this was not only a great idea but maybe an ofter by the poet-maverick of the Democratic party to lead the disenchanted plague-on-both-your-houses voters against the twoparty "tyranny."

Demos Are Dubious

The organization Democrats thought this was a capricious and irresponsible bid by McCarthy to regain the political prominence and youthful following he had in the presidential election of 1968. And of course, the organization Republicans were delighted, feeling that a thirdparty movement by Wallace and a fourth-party movement by Mc-Carthy would almost certainly assure the re-election of President Nixon.

Well, there is probably less here than meets the eye. Mc-Carthy, surfacing a couple of days later in Philadelphia, treated all the fuss with gentle mockery. He hadn't said any-thing new, he said. He wasn't offering to start a third or fourth party. He was just going around saying what he thought, as usual, and the press as usual, he added, was turning a comment into a campaign. People were odd, he said, and he should know.

Still, there could be a critical and even decisive issue here, for both major parties are clearly losing the allegiance of many of their voters. And while splinter parties cannot yet attract a triumphant majority of "indepen-

Such martial dictation of hair styles is sadly reminiscent of similar madness in Greece in 1967-1968, when the military there also cut the hair of youths. However, at that time the world press carried reports and thus travelers contemplating visiting that country had advance warn. ing in the event that they had long hair. TONDON -Like the U.S. Democrats, the British Labor party seems to have a death wish. The notorious recent example was the period 1989-82, when at successive party conferences it pub-licly hiew up over such issues as disarmament and nationalization, with devastating effects on public support. As Keith Waterhouse of the London Dally Mirror has put it, the party periodically "repairs to some convenient seaside resort, climbs into a lacquered box and proceeds to saw itself in An innocent outsider might wonder how that could be possible. Less than a year ago, after all, a Labor government in office was firmly pledged to seeking entry into the Community. No member of the cabinet had dissented from that policy. Harold Wilson, then prime minister, had said repeatedly: "We shall not take no for an answer." What has happened since then? Labor has lost a general election, that's what. #### Callaghan's Case

The ambition factor can be seen nakedly in the case of James Callaghan, the party's shadow Home Secretary. ## Pomp(idou) and Circumstance

By James Goldsborough

PARIS.—Georges Pompidou has been making it an almost daily refrain: Britain is now ready to join France and the Continent in the construction of a "European Europe."

A European Europe is an old Gaullist line, but Mr. Pompidou puts it to a slightly different There is a common elehowever: It is a Europe with a diminished American influence.

What will the new Europe be like? The Economist was being only partly facetious when it cover picture of Mr. Pontpidou with the caption, "Europe is what I say it is." This is partly true. In the past the other members of the European Economic Community wanted to move farther and faster than the French. That things are moving at all today means they are moving at French speed.

Mr. Pompideu doesn't even like the name Common Market anymore. Too mercantile. The Common Market shall now be which encompasses his conception of a confederation of sovereign states. There are no demirrers. The rest of the Community is too pleased that things are moving at all to argue over languages or terminology. The Gaullist organ La Nation can even announce on its front page that, "basically, there is only one way to build Europe"-de Gaulle's La Nation may not have noticed, but the European Europe Mr. Pompidou has spelled out over last several weeks is not quite the same as de Gaulle's. De Gaulle never felt that Britain could be truly European, but Mr. Pompidou has accepted Mr. Heath's word for that.

To begin with, Mr. Pompidou abhors any idea of a "third force," a term to which de Gaulle gave currency. The new Europe will not be a new bloc-arbitrat ing, shifting, balancing between the two others. Mr. Pompidou explains it as follows:

An Explanation

When we talk of a European Europe we are saying that if decisions are taken by one country alone, outside the Community framework, or if they are taken under the influence and direction of a country outside Europe, even they are later embraced by the Community, they are not European."

This paragraph gives a clear idea of what he has in mind. The first two clauses are directed at West Germany, which embarked on its current monetary policy without telling its European Economic and Monetary Union partners. That, according to Mr. Pompidou, is not his idea of being European. The succeeding clauses are aimed at the United States and the doller.

People close to Mr. Pompidou are saying that he came out of this month's monetary crisis more firmly convinced than ever that the first steps toward a European Europe are through an economic and monetary union. These people say he let Finance Minister Valery Giscard d'Estaing suspend French participation in the union solely as a gesture of French displeasure over German actions, but his belief in the union was reinforced.

This is why Mr. Pompidou put emphasis on the pound sterling during his meeting with Mr. Heath. The French president wanted to know if his ideas for creating monetary union and eventually a common currency were compatible with Mr. Heath's ideas on the sterling balances.

the organisation inter-etatique, The two conceptions clearly were compatible; after the meetings British spokesmen gave hints as to what to expect when they said that Britain would need a certain "transitional period of digestion" after joining the EEC before moving on to economic and monetary union. In other words, time to run down the balances without disrupting things.

> Mr. Pomnidou's emphasis on sterling and monetary union also distinguishes his European Europe from de Gaulle's De Gaulle seldom got farther down this trail than to call periodically for an increase in the gold price. Mr. Pompidou knows France has little support for this idea and he does not push it. "On ne fati pas la guerre pour la perdre," is how Pompidou people describe his attitude.

Economics to the Fore

The Pompidolian Europe is primarily economic and not the Gaullist idea of a political force under French domination. In any case, France, by accepting British admission, excludes French domination, but also excludes the possibility of German domination. European diplomats like to think of the new Europe as one in which the inner power relationships will be constantly shifting. But political unity is a goal, Mr. Pompidou told Mr. Heatn that the nations would be "working together toward real unity, first of all to the economic do-

Rebels Called Still Active in East Pakistan

Clashes With Army, Terrorism Reported

By Sydney H. Schanberg NEW DELHI, May 28 (NYT) — Despite official descriptions of normality in East Pakistan, guerrills activity and the army crackdown continue, according to reports from the area.

This picture of disrupted life has been provided by authoritative foreign sources inside East Pakistan by foreigners who have recently visited the area and by information gathered by this correspondent on a recent tour of border regions. Foreign newsmen except for six taken on a brief government-guided tour early this month, have been barred from the province since the army crackdown began on March 25. The foreign informants report that the Pakistani Army has been able to widen its control of vital installations and major towns and cities. But they say that guerrilla and terrorist activity by Beneali insurgents-buttressed by Bengali noncooperation in general—has prevented the army from establishing an effective civil administration in most of East Pakistan.

Contrary Evidence

While the army asserts that "organized armed resistance has been liquidated all over the province," the foreign sources say there is considerable evidence to the contrary.

On May 12, they say. Bengali insurgents clashed with army troops only 15 miles northwest of Dacca, the provincial capital, the town of Amin Bazar. On the same day, insurgents reportedly captured the Rocket, a large and well-known river steamer that plies between Dacca and Khulna to the southwest. Many foreign tourists used to take the Rocket for the leisurely and scenic ride.

The foreign informants said 300 passengers were on board when the steamer was seized near Khulna. All were reported to have been robbed.

Firebombs and Grenades Foreign sources also say that Bengali activists are making and exploding firebombs and grenades

Spanish Police Seek Attackers Of French Consul

SAN SEBASTIAN, Spain, May 28 (UPI).-Police today combed the Basque mountains area for four armed extremists who tried to kidnap a French diplomat but fled when he resisted them.

Police sources said security measures included increased surveillance of the Spanish-French border and special protection for French Consul-General Henri Woliner and honorary West German Consul Eugen Beihl. Mr. Beihl was kidnapped and released by Basque extremists last De-

Mr. Woliner narrowly escaped being kidnapped by four armed men who ambushed him yesterday when he returned home from his office and tried to drag him to a waiting car. Mr. Wollner, 58, punched his assailants and succeeded in driving them off.

The attempted abduction of Mr. Woliner was linked by political sources to restrictions imposed by French authorities on Spanish Basque nationalists living in exile in France. Thirty Basques, who protested the re-strictions by staging a hunger strike in the cathedral at Beyonne, France, gave up today after an eight-day fast.

[In Gibraltar, police here are searching for two men who attacked French Consul John Ortoli as he was walking home after a French musical culture society party. The two assailants believed to be British, knocked him down and kicked him before running away, the Associated Press reported. Police said the motive was robbery.]

Delacrolx et le Fauvisme, Musée Delacroix, 6 Place Furstenberg, Paris-6e, through November. Exhibitions like this one, that are based on superficial and formal affinities, strike me as being of doubtful value. But one may as well see a Matisse, a Van Dongen or a Marquet here as elsewhere. The show is distinguisted by the fact that it displays one of the rare paintings by Delacroix with any real movement in it ("Boissy d'Anglas à la Convention"). Comparison with his other works points up the difference. Delacroix tried to paint whirlpools of movement, but with rare exceptions they are frozen whirlpools.

Mohr has programmed a computer to do drawings and you may write your comments on the wall. Tisserand has large surrealistico-allegorical paintings in which his own features regularly appear. Rustin's paintings have pictorial quality but usually lack unity unless there is a subject to hold them together. Kolar has a series of collages and does some rather amusing distortions of works by Ingres by slicing up reproductions and fitting them together again. Francken, taking 'communicate or die" as her theme and the telephone as a symbol of communication, has chosen to exhibit telephones in a variety of shapes and sizes. -MICHAEL GIBSON.

Fuseli or Firbank fantasy.

Over the years, from broadly brushed visions of despair in an orange glare of color, the painter has slowly and gravely progressed toward abstraction. Only the flat-tend elements of the former realistic nightmares, the claws, beaks and wings of monsters, in intenser, brighter colors, remained to make a busy fabric of segments and coils biting into each other. Lately this tight interlocking is loosening and large clear sweeps in black and white point to a calmer and more directed energy.

Nuremberg's Tribute To Albrecht Dürer

By Barbara C. Beuys

NUREMBERG.—This is Durer's year. Particularly in Nuremberg. where he was born 500 years ago.

Thus far, the superficial result has been kitsch, kitsch and more kitsch. Dürer is being sold in a public relations campaign like some new high-powered, enzyme-loaded washday product. He is, it seems, "Germany's first hippie." Nuremberg has spent almost 10 million marks to celebrate the birth of its most famous son and to blur the brown shadows of the recent past. But this Madison Avenue-style promotion is unimportant—even.

worthwhile—because it has produced a unique event in the art history of this century. Nuremberg has put together the greatest Ditter exhibition of all times in the Germanisches Nationalmuseum. It is the first and probably the last,

Here you can see the whole Dürer, in 500 originals from 110 museums and collections from all over the world, including 200 drawings, the complete graphic work, his finest paintings, along with 200 works by Durer's contemporaries, books, documents and

This exhibition overcomes the Dürer image as seen through the eyes of the German romantics—an image still much in vogue, mixing mystery, nationalism and gemitlichkeit. All this is swept away by the work of an artist who was Germany's most important contribution to the international history of art. A devout Christian all his life. Dürer made man the center of his art.

If there is a center to this exhibition, it is the room where his three self-portraits hang together for the first time. As one art historian puts it. "he was the first artist (in history) to be fascinated by his own image." "Dürer With a Thistle" (1493, from the Louvre: is full of youth and curiosity. The self-portrait with the landscape in the background (1498, from the Prado), shows a confident and successful artist. The third and last one (1500, from the Pinckothek, Munich) shows an idealized, Christ-like face with eyes looking beyond and through everything. It was an extraordinary short way to perfection. These portraits are proof of what Dürer, the consummate printmaker, could do with color: He was a superb painter. The 1500 self-portrait was his last-now that he had looked within himself, Dürer could look out at the world. Before he was 30. Direr was no longer the humble, medieval craftsman but an artist who was his own master, a man who dired with kings and cardinals, a friend of Erasmus and admirer of Luther. He never ceased doing portraits of other people-it was the easiest way to make money on his journeys. Dürer was very much of his own time, impressed by the mysteries and superstitions of the Middle Ages and waiting for the end of the world. On the other hand, he stood at the beginning of a new epoch where man would be the center of the universe. A rational man for whom art was a science to be learned. Dürer tried to combine the new and the old and was thereby inevitably the victim of contradiction and conflict. The poles of his life have geographic names: the North and the South.

Twice he traveled to Italy, once staying a whole year in Venice (1494-1495). He learned the art of perspective there and to draw the human body after nude models. After Italy, his figures are of flesh and bone, full of reality. Then Dürer in his turn began to influence art in the north of Italy.

At the same time, he discovered nature as an independent subject for art. Traveling through the Alps on his way home from Venice. he painted the landscapes along the way in soft watercolors that are strikingly modern. In his "Italian Mountains," with a few generous strikes, Direc creates the density and atmosphere of 2 whole area. Once home, he painted the area around Nuremberg with the most delicate strokes and colors. No artist in his time or long after him-has done anything that comes near it.

Durer's sense of accuracy and perfection grew out of a deep conviction with its roots in Greek philosophy. For Dürer, beauty existed only in nature. By his accuracy, he hoped to cut through the surface to reveal what was underneath, the essence of being, He was looking for the eternal. For Dürer, the man of the Renaissance, art was still a divine inspiration.

This huge slide of a Dürer self-portrait in the Nuremberg railroad station is part of a 10 million mark promotion surrounding the 500th anniversary of the artist's birth. "The Madisonstyle promotion is unimportant-even worthwhile-because it has produced a unique event in international art history."

Above all, he believed that to see something is to recognize, know it. And Dürer saw everything, each line, each shade. But for all his clarity, there was always the heritage of the past. His woodcuts and engravings are full of mysterious symbols, of melancholy and fatalism. No time for reason.

To be confronted with this complete body of art is in a sense perplexing. It is the sort of perplexity that results from a relationship bridging 500 years and bringing the artist and viewer into a sort of aesthetic intimacy. Granted, this man, his time-with all its purport for the 1970s-are not ours. A mystery remains.

This exhibition has been put together in the most intelligent way. Despite the enormous quantity of works on view, you go from one rather small room to another. You cannot stop looking. There is nothing to distract. Another masterpiece is the catalogue. It is a summary of the arts during the Renaissance. Each of the 732 works on view is described, analyzed and documented in the most careful way. 1"1471 Albrecht Dürer 1971," Germanisches Nationalmuseum Nuremberg, to Aug. 1: open daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Tuesday and Thursday from 8 p.m. to 10 p.m.)

Other exhibitions on view in Nuremberg include: "Hommage à Dürer," also at the Germanisches Nationalmuseum (to Aug. 29), includes works of modern artists related in one fashion

"Second Biennale Nuremberg 1971: Artist-Theory-Work," Künstlerhaus und Kunsthalle, to Aug. 1, a big and ambitious exhibition that tries to put the theories and the work of artists from Leonardo da Vinci on into confrontation.

Hare Revival: Better Things to Come

By John Walker

LONDON, May 28 (IRT). There has been praise for David Hare's comedy "Slag." Originally seen last year at Hampstead, it is now at the Royal Court, where Mr. Hare is resident playwright, in a new production with an outstanding production with an outstanding cast: Anna Massey, Lynn Redgrave and Barbara Perris.

I wish I coud join in the ap plause. But the play is rarely more than a premise of better things to come when Mr. Hare has his writing under control. He has been overpraised both for his youth—he was 22 when he wrote "Slag"-and for his tonicality. The theme of the play is women's lib. The conclusion: That women are nothing without men and, even then, are vain, silly, and self-regarding.

The setting is a seedy but upper-class girls school. At the beginning, the headmistress (Anna Massey), her deputy (Barbara Ferris) and the rest of the staff (Lynn Redgrave) swear to avoid all intercourse. particularly Sexual, with men and also do their best to ignore their cight pupils. At the end, all the pupils have left and the trio remains playing bockey in the common room.

Lynn Redgrave gives an excellent comic performance, al-though it is one that she has given many times before, in other plays and films. She does her puppy-dog act: Big, bouncy, lovable, and forever creating havoc. Anna Massey adds an acid flavor to her lines, and Barbara Ferris relies on her familiar sensuous women, even down to a totally itrelevant strip-tease that has been added since the original production

Mr. Hare can write wittily and well, even if his jokes tend to be well-polished epigrams scattered about the play like so many currants in a cake. But, after the original situation, having cut off his three women from the world, he seems understandably at a loss to know how to develop the play. He cannot even make up his mind whether his intentions towards his characters are dis-honorable or not, treating them alternatively with derision and sympathy. Finally, he ends up echoing other plays. A scene of hu-

"The Basic Training of Pavlo Hummel," a story of a soldier from recruit camp to death in a Salgon whorehouse, "has a persuasive way of saying thing: that are not all original." Clive Barnes says. The play, written by David W. Rabe, introduces "a new and authentic" introduces "a new and authentic" voice to the theater, says Barnes, praising Rabe for a "sense of what people really say," as well as a feel for the "dynamics of charac-ter confrontation." However, a great deal of the play's effectiveness depends on Hummel himself in Barnes's estimation, and here William Atherton had "a distinct personal success." Jeff Bleckner directs the production at the

"Fericles," presented by the Cinssic Stage Company at the CSC Repertory Theater, "one of the most neglected plays of the entire Shakespeare canon," its text "considerably edited" and some of the link passages insertfrom Shakespeare's source material, "is by no means a great play," reports Barnes of the new production, but "better than might have been expected." Christopher Martin's staging seizes upon the very simplicity" of its story, says Barnes. His use of a bare stage, with masks and minimal props, is "effective, and

The Art Market: A Graphic Lesson for Buyers

By Souren Melikian

DARIS, May 28 (IHT) .- The late David David-Weill, whose impressionist and modern graphics was one of the last great eclectic He was collecting collectors. during an epoch when it was usual for the haute bourgeoisie of Europe to show an interest in all aspects of art. During his lifetime the died shortly after World If), he bought virtually everything, from Near Eastern antiquities to Picasso. But what is more interesting, his purchases were almost unfailingly success-

Mr. David-Weill's medieval and Renaissance objects, to be sold in June, were perfect: his collection of French silver from the 17th and 18th century, to be auctioned at Gallièra on June 4, is so good that it has the international art world in an uproar. This was the man who gave the Musée des Arts Décoratifs in Paris the finest collection of Chinese cloisonné enamels in France, Indeed, many of them are discussed by Harry Garner, the leading authority on the subject, and were used by him as references to sort out other cojects in this difficult

Every now and then, some museum curator would approach Mr. David-Weill a member of the National Museums Council, hoping that the collector would donate one of his rarities—and quite often he did.

For a man with such a broad range of interests, modern graph-ics were only a sideline. His collection of them bears witness to his open-mindedness, for, in his day, most collectors turned their noses up at the production of an age (their own) that they regarded as decadent. His graphalso prove the excellence of his taste-or perhaps that of his dealer-adviser, or, most probably, both.

Unparalleled

No such collection has come up for sale anywhere in the world in the past few years. One has to look back to 1958 and 1959 and the Boris Loncle auctions for e comparable standard of quality. The only place where large series of prints approaching such a level have turned up in recent years sems to have been at the Kornfeld auction house in Bern. Switzerland, where a sale of graphics takes place once a year. But the Kornfeld graphics are painstak-ingly gathered from many sources and do not represent the achievement of a single man.

And this is what lends the David-Weill graphics collection is special interest: The unmis-akable imprint of a highly inividual aesthetic attitude. Going rictly by names, his choice was iversified. Almost all the major pressionist and faure masters were represented. The best graphics by Edgar Degas, Edouard Manet. Camille Pissarro and Paul Gauguin were included in the collection. So were others by Odilon Redon the 19th-century forebear of surrealism), Pierre Bonnard, Edouard Vuillard, Tou-louse-Lautrer, Matisse, Picasso, Braque, Ensor Yet, surprisingly, the collection had great unity. Expressed in terms of visual effect, it was characterized by a certain quality of contrasted black and white, a bent for strong outlines. Mr. David-Weill liked slihouettes, faces with eyes looking down or sideways, or dreamily lost in emptiness. In terms of feeling, he sought a tragic atmosphere, exssed with great restraint.

The same sense of lurking anxiety recurs in works that, in other respects, differ consider-ably—the Degas monotypes done as studies for the projected illustrations of Ludovic Halevy's "La Famille Cardinal"; or Pissarro's two peasants in the rain, standing as shadows in a meadow; or the harsh fcaes of Toulouse-Lautrec's prostitutes or the fantastic winged horses with eyes like empty holes by Redon. All these seem to respond to the same search for an atmosphere of suspended threat. Even mildmannered Dunoyer de Segonzac, that merriest of all modern engravers, managed to come up with one of those sad appari-

The Buyers

Buyers apparently caught the collector's mood, for they paid the highest prices for the prints that came closest to Mr. David-Weill's ideal. For Degas's monotype, "Et Maintenant, Aliez-vous-en . . ." (And Now, Go Away), the price was 179,510 francs-a world record. A strident print by Manet, showing sharply contrasted cats in an eerie black and white setting, made 79,710 francs.

On the whole, bidding was high. Prices agreed with many of the expert estimates for the more usual examples, and rose far above them for some of the outstanding pieces. world record of 179,510 francs was double the expert's estimated value. The next monotype by Degas was also twice the esti-mate, reaching 89,600. Edquard Manet's "Le Ballon" at 166.600 francs was likewise double the estimated value.

As opposed to the rather steady level of prices, the works of Dunoyer de Segonzac did not do very well. According to Huguette Bérès, who has specialized in impressionist and modern art for 15 years, his prints would have made more money in a less glamorous sale. Her view was that they were killed by the quality of the surrounding masterpieces. She also pointed out rather interesting aspect of desroom psychology. She was there to buy and she assured me that, throughout the sale. the room seemed to wake up whenever important, consistent series by the great names came up—the monotypes by Degas, the Manet series, the Paul Gauguin set, the Picassos and the Toulouse-Lautrecs-only to sit back when either lesser names or a few odd pieces-appeared.

For instance, Odilon Redon was rather inexpensive by current standards. Two admirable prints (Lot 256), "Pegase Captif" and (Lot 258), sold well under the expert's estimates. They were in splendld condition and came from sets painted in small numbers (only 25 copies are known to have been printed of Lot 258.1 But the timing was wrong. They were sandwiched in between Picasso and Toulouse-Lautrec, coming as an anti-climax to Picasso and serving to emphasize the greater punch of

Toulouse-Lautrer. The Picassos rose to enormous

Meager Meal, Lot 209; fetched 70,300 francs, twice the latest price known to have been paid in the trade and a price not justified by any great 250 copies have been printed. Only the glamour of Picasso's name can explain the bid. Work by Toulouse-Lautrec, on the other hand, sold for 20 percent more than the average estimates and in one case, twice the estimate: "Elsa Dite la Viennoise" (Elsa, Known as the Viennese) made 122,600 francs.

This sale is well in tune with a growing trend: The gap between those works that are the pick of the art world and very much in the public eye and others of either lesser quality or repute. The gap is widening.

Looking at the sale as a whole, there were, frankly, no surprises, Given the circumstances, the prices were "good"-hut that is all. Few sales have been more heavily advertised than these David-Welll auctions. The name alone is enough to draw virtually every art market figure from all over the world. Further, two top auctioneering firms were involved in organizing the sales; the Ader-Picard and Rheims-Laurin teams As a result twice the usual amount of preparation went into the sale, each firm using its contacts. The expert was one of the best-Paul Prouté.

Seen from this point of view, the sale of the David-Weill graphics shows that the cream of the market is holding its own very nicely despite the downward trend elsewhere. From an inestment point of view the son seems to be: Don't buy any-thing but unquestioned, well known works of art.

FINANCIAL NEWS AND NOTES

U.S. Construction Hits Record

U.S. construction contracts rose to a monthly record in April, increasing 17 percent to $7.74 billion, from $6.64 billion in April a year ago, the F. W. Dodge division of McGraw-Hill Information Systems reports. The gain pushed the Dodge index to 161, using the average of 1967 monthly construction totals as a base of 100. The most important factor in the rise was a spurt in the start of several large electric generating plants with a combined total of more than $1 billion in construction-contract value Contract value of nonresidential building how-ever declined $2.08 billion, down 12 percent from $2.37 billion in April 1970, and 2 percent below March's seasonally-adjusted $2.2 billion. major weakness in the nonresidential continues to be industrial construction.

Japanese Bank Merger Approved

Shareholders of Dai-Iehi Bank and Nippon Kangyo Bank have approved the previously announced plan for the two banks to merge on Oct. 1. The new bank, to be called Dai-Ichi Kangyo Bank Ltd., will be Japan's largest commercial bank in terms of deposits. Combined deposits in the two banks at the end of March totaled the equivalent of $4.59 billion.

U.S. Buyers Plan to Spend More

U.S. consumers are in expansive mood, with spending planned on all major items-cars. homes and appliances, according to a survey conducted for the Conference Board, a private research group. But the survey, covering March and April, also found that consumers are still pessimistic about current business and employment prospects. Some 35 percent of those aske considered business conditions "bad," compared to 31 percent in January-February. On buying plans, the survey found that 8.8 percent planned car purchases, compared to 8 percent in January-February; 3.1 percent house purchases (compared to 2.6 percent); 40 percent a major appliance purchase (compared to 35 percent and 45 percent planned vacations (compared to 41

Fox Board Seen Winning Proxy

Management of Twentieth Century-Fox aupears to have won the recent proxy contest, but insurgent stockholders are vowing to take the fight to court. Judges who counted the shares voted at the May 18 annual meeting said unofficially the management led by president Dennis Stanfill won by about 1.5 million shares out of 6.4 million voted. A spokesman for the dissidents noted that they had until the official announcement of the vote on June 8 to check and challenge the proxies voted by management and made it clear a court fight was contemplated. The tally left Mr. Stan-fill, who replaced Darry Zanuck as chief executive last winter, in firm control of the company. Mr. Zanuck resigned as chairman at the May 18 meeting but remained with the company as production chief. The management victory apparently means he either can remain as chairman or go through with his resignation and head up an independent pro-

MEMORIES

By Julian Huxley. Mustrated, Harper & Row. 296

Reviewed by Louis J. Halle

T 84, Sir Julian Huxley may that threaten its future be the last notable heir to Among them are the an English reformist tradition that goes back to Jeremy Bentham. Bentham, the two Mills, and the Fabians after them, wanted to bring happiness to the greatest number. John Ruskin's objective was to shed the light of art into the darkness of the working man's mind. T. H. Huxley and others upheld the torch of science to dispel religi-ous superstitions that, prevailing among the ignorant masses, had hitherto retarded the progress of mankind.

Like his grandfhater, Sir Julian has contributed to pure scientific knowledge while also pursuing a career as educator and publicist committed to spreading the light of science. Again like his grand-father, in a third capacity, that of philosopher, he has offered evolution as the adequate foundation for a system of belief re-garded as providing a better alternative to traditional religion. After the several successful careers he has had, no one would say that Sir Julian was an ordinary man, and until I read the present volume of his memoirs, which takes his life up to 1945. it had never occurred to me to think of him as such. By the time I was halfway through it, however, I could no longer avoid the conclusion that, if one judged this book alone, one would have to find him undistinguished. These memoirs are written carelessly, artiessly, the way ordinary people write letters home saying where they have been whom they have seen, and what they have done. A spectacular sight, however, is not adequately described by saying that one was thrilled by it, or that one will never forget it. Having always read Sir Julian's writings with a respect that was, perhaps, uncritical, I was impelled by the disappointing impres-sion of the man conveyed in the autobiography to go back to his philosophical writings.

In "Point Counter Point" by Sir Julian's brother, Aldous, when Mary Rampion in conversation states a favorite thesis of her husband's, he tells her to shut up." "But isn't that what you say?" she asks. "What I say is what I say," he replies. "It be-comes quite different when you say it." Reading Sir Julian's chapter on "The Humanist Frame" in the book of that title, I found that, while I was in accord with most of the points he made, I was put off by the way he made them.

The intellectual tradition to which Sir Julian belongs entails the moral danger to which all missionaries and reformers are exposed. Implicit in it is the assumption that one has oneself the enlightenment achieved which, godlike, one undertakes to confer upon the ignorant. Sir Julian, addressing us as children, not only tells us what is right and what is wrong; he tells us what place nature has reserved for us in her universe, and what a fine future she has opened up for us if only we will behave ourselves.

Discussing the evolution of life (which is, after all, measured in thousands of millions of years). Sir Julian lists a number of items

NEW YORK, May 28 (NYT). Lou Brock's consecutive-game hitting streak reached 23 games last night, the longest in the major leagues this season, and teammate Dick Schofield has to be credited with a major assist. Schofield, acquired by the St. Louis Cardinals in an off-season trade with the Boston Red Sox, started the 31-year-old Brock on the streak by loaning his bat to the National League's four-time base-stealing champion. Brock has been punishing opposing pitchers with it ever since. Since switching to the Schofield-model bat, longer and heavier than what he had been using, Brock has been batting well over .400 and took over third place in National League batting. Before last night's game against Chicago he had a 367 batting average, 42 points better than his 1964 mark, best of his Brock wasted little time in extending his streak last night. He singled in his first trip to the plate and followed up with two more as the Cards blanked the Chicago Cubs, 10-0, in St. Louis.

NBA All-Stars Playing ABA At Astrodome

HOUSTON, May 28 (AP).-The National and American Basketball Associations head for the first on-the-court confrontation tonight in the Astrodome with each side apparently playing the all-star game for different Several ABA players said they were playing to benefit charity and to get more exposure for their four-year-old league. The NBA players indicated they are playing to show there can be competition between the two leagues without a merger.

We certainly are not playing this game out of defiance to the club owners or as a weapon against the merger," said Larry Brown of the Denver Rockets and coach of the ABA all-stars. He said: "It will finally give us a chance to compete against the NBA."

Oscar Robertson, president of the NBA Players Association, was quoted earlier as saying the NBA was playing in defiance of the owners, who are seeking congressional sanction of a merger with the ABA

But Larry Fleisher, counsel for the NBA players, said Robertson's statement was misinterpreted. "He really didn't say it was in defiance of the owners," Fleisher said "He said that the game was being played to show pete against each other without an illegal merger. The NBA players definitely are against the merger. Before the ABA, there was no other place to go." The NBA team will be coached by Bill Russell.

Tenor for Indianapolis 500 To Be Set by Former Winner

INDIANAPOLIS, May 28.-Depend on it, "Back Home Again in Indiana," the sentimental song that characterizes the flavor of the pre-race festivities of the Indianapolis 500, can be messed up by the best professional tenors, domestic or imported. One of them, some years ago, mixed up the lyrics with "The Banks of the Wabash."

That is not likely to happen in tomorrow's running of the 500, because the singer has known the song for 50 years. He is Peter de Paolo, winner of the 500 in years old, was the first driver here to average more than 100 miles an hour, the first to a fuel pump and the first to use balloon" tires. He will add another first tomorrow when he becomes the first former winner to start the show with "Back Home." De Paolo has even been practicing with the Purdue University Band, which will accompany him. Revson Has Pole

After De Paolo's song, 33 cars will roar off for the 55th running of the 200-lap race, with Peter Revson of New York, in his bright orange Team McLaren Mark 16, on the pole.

Revson surprised favored Mark Donohue, of Media, Pa., two weeks ago by taking the inside spot on the first row with an average speed for the four-lap trial of 178.696 miles an hour. Donohue's speed, good enough for the middle of the first row, was 177.087. Filling out the front row is Bobby Unser, of Albuquerque, N. M., who drove his Eagle-Offenhauser to an average of 175 .-

Donohue, who became the only man to average more than 180 mph on a lap around the 2 1/2mile track, remains the co-favorite along with three-time winner A. J. Foyt, of Houston.

Foyt, driving a Coyote-Ford, will start the race on the outside of the second row, in sixth position. The man who won the Indy 500 in 1961, 1964 and 1967 qualified for his 14th attempt here with a 174317 average speed for the four laps.

It was Donohue, driving his McLaren Mark 16 for owner Roger Penske of Philadelphia, who caused the biggest stir this month at the speedway. Although practice times and speeds are unofficial, Donohue stunned nearly everyone when he pushed his blue Offenhauser-powered car to a 180.977 clocking on the speedway's electric timer.

Donohue lost the pole spot and the meet record, 3:568, set here in 1968.

Liquori is not interested in a fast time and will want victory as easily as possible for two reasons. if the government looks on the Lockheed loan favorably, they will find a way to get me off the hook too." This is how Harvey tells his story: "About a year ago, a section of the Defense Department was having a farewell party for one of their employees who was leaving to join an aerospace company. They asked me to develop a new type of sandwich which would give the party a big boost. But they wanted me to bring it in for a reasonable price. "I put my designers to work on it, and we came up with The Goldfinger,' which consisted of boneless all-white meat, deep fried chicken fingers topped with cole slaw. Russian dressing, and seeded roll. We estimated we could make the sandwich for $1.25 each, which would include a reasonable profit of 10 percent. "The food committee giving the party approved the design and ordered 150 sandwiches to be delivered in 30 days, on the afternoon of the party.

pickle slices on a double-twist

"I ordered the ingredients, but a few days later I got a call from a secretary. She said that while the Army liked the sandwich as it was, the Navy was wondering if, instead of a doubletwist seeded roll, the sandwich could be made with rye bread. "I explained that regular rye bread would not be able to support the weight of the chicken fingers, and I would have to add a heavier rye bread with a reinforced crust which would add another 20 cents to the sandwich. eat double-twist seeded rolls.

"So I called up the bakery and asked them if they could develop a heavier rye bread that could do the same work as a seeded roll. They told me they could do it, but it wouldn't be cheap.

"A week went by and the secretary called again. She said the Air Force had just got around to studying The Gold-finger sandwich and they wanted something more sophisticated. Was it possible to add either a slice of ham or a slice of cheese? "I told her it was always possible, but if you're going to add to a sandwich you have to pay for it. It meant hiring an extra person to cut the ham or cheese. researching where the best place was to put it, testing it and retraining my employees in an entirely new sandwich concept. I couldn't see how I could bring The Goldfinger in for less than

"'Perfectly okay.' she said. 'as long as the sandwich did the job.'

"A week went by and I had a visit from the secretary. She told me the Army personnel in the department felt that "The Goldfinger' should also have lettuce and tomato on it. I explained that if you added lettuce and tomato you would have to have larger slices of rye bread and heavier caraway seeds which would bring the cost to $2.95.

"She approved it, but the next day I got a call saying that because of the overnm they wanted to cut back on the order of sandwiches from 150 to 50 and asked if I would eliminate the chicken altogether. The afternoon before the affair I received another call. The aerospace job for the man for whom they were giving the party fell through and they were canceling the party.

"I told them I was stuck with $300 worth of merchandise and would have to lay off four employees because of the cancellation of The Goldfingers. They said that while the Defense Department would recommend a loan to tide me over, it was up to Congress to decide whether I would get it or not. But first they had to get the Lockheed problem out of the way."

Celebrities Jam Gala Premiere at JFK Center

By Nan Robertson

WASHINGTON, May 28 (NYT).—Only tive days after the opening of the Johnson Library in Texas, Washington had its own titanic party last night in a titanic building on the Potomac's banks and more celebrities than could be taken in all to-

It was the gala preview of the $70 million John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. About the same number of guests -3,000-milled around, gawked, danced, sipped and nibbled at the center, which is as big as four football fields side by side.

Most of the VIPs assembled in the grand foyer, including hordes of Kennedys from the matriach Rose on down. Mamie Doud Eisenhower, David and Julie Nixon Elsenhower, Martha Mitchell, Bill Blass and Ann Fogarty, the designers, Herman Wouk, the author, and society, diplomatic and art world figures such as the Angier Biddle Dukes, the David K. E. Bruces and the Paul Mellons.

The foyer is so gigantic-630 feet long. six stories high, with an all-glass wall facing the river—that if Mickey Mantle had belted his longest homer from one end of the room, it wouldn't have hit the opposite wall.

Right in the middle of it all was Meyer Davis, leading his dance orchestra. The music included Mr. Davis's own world premiere creation called "Love You." dedicated to Tricia Nixon and her fiance, Edward Finch Cox, who were not there.

The society band leader could not remember which movement of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony he took "Love You" from, but it turned out to be loosely adapted from the second theme of the third movement.

A crimson fire curtain shut off the stage of the unfinished opera house in the same building, but behind it, Peter Duchin and a rock band called The Second Eagle were playing for the young set

September Première

The performance premiere will not be until September, with a rock opera composed by Leonard Bernstein. Guests for the gala flooded in from all over the country. Mrs. John A. McCone, wife of the former director of the Central Intelligence Agency and chairman of the California Friends of the Kennedy Center, had chartered a 747 jet to bring the friends from Los Angeles.

But too many wanted to come at different times, so she canceled the plane.

Mrs. Aristotle S. Onassis, widow of President Kennedy, was an absentee, but "definitely" plans to attend the performance opening in the fall, according to her social secretary, Nancy Tuckerman. Mrs. Onessis was en route from the Caribbean to Athens aboard her husband's yacht. But besides the late President's mother, Mrs. Joseph Kennedy, the Kennedy family and in-laws who were there included Sen, and Mrs. Edward M. Kennedy; Mrs. Robert F. Kennedy, escorted by former Ambassador W. Averell Harriman, the Stephen Smiths, the Sargent Shrivers and Patricia Kennedy Lawford.

The most costly gift, from Italy, was 3,500 tens of Carrara marble to wall the building.

Round tables for ten persons were set up around the Kennedy Center, in the grand foyer and vicinity, under 18 enormous chandeliers that look like stalactites without points. The tablecloths were printed with splashy red, blue and green

The tables were centered with 1,800 red carnations and greenery-each bouquet twinkling with tlny bee lights powered by a battery hidden amidst the flowers. Although the 10 p.m. gala was black tie, the members of The Second Eagle were wearing white tie "as a gesture toward the establishment"-which kind of gesture was not known.

The guests were offered a cold buffet; strawberries, champagne and any other drink desired. There were almost 100 private dinner parties given around town before the gala began.

PEOPLE:

Using a little flattery, the U.S. lar estate for a home for weather service says it will contions to name burricanes after women on the theory that Betty ounds more powerful than Bob. "We intend no slux on women," the weather service director. George P. Cressman, said. In het, quite the opposite."

But the weather service acknowledged that the use of faminine names to designate hurricaner has brought criticism from worren's liberation groups, some Just the same, it announced II femule names chosen for the 1971 crop of hurricanes that may be born in the Atlantic, the Caribbean and the Gulf of Mexico.

The practice originated during World War II, when forecasters found it easier to designate a hurricane by name rather than coordinates on a map. "A storm with a girl's name had personality," the service said in a state-ment announcing the new names. "You remembered it, and stayed alers"

The names chosen for the 1971 hurricane season: Arlene, Beth, Chice. Doris. Edith, Fern, Ginger He'ol, Irene, Janice, Kristy Laura, Margo, Nona, Orchid, Porlus, Rachel, Sandra, Terese, Verna and Wallis.

On Wednesday the Trib dutifully reported a milestone in the life of old George Linstrum-he was in magistrates court at Leeds, England, for the 500th time since his first appearance to 1922. The count ruled that the event was something of a special occasion, dropped the drunk and disorderly charges and sent the 74-yearold derelict home without even a lecture. Alas, there is a postscript. The next day (sigh) old George was back in court on drunk and disorderly charges. Number 501. And this time, although you might argue it was still a special occasion, the judge fined him 50 pence ($1.20).

The recipe for Hawalian salad in the Norfolk, England, parish magazine read; "Three cups of thinly-sliced crisp cabbage, one cup of pineapple cubes, one tart apple chopped small, 1/4 cup of preserved finger cut in small pieces."
